Beating the pandemic

a workplace response to the global challenge of HIV and AIDS

The HIV/AIDS pandemic has set the clock back by decades in some of the world's poorest regions. It has slowed the painstaking progress made towards the economic and social well-being of millions of people.

The International Labour Organisation now estimates that two-thirds of the 40 million people living with HIV/AIDS are workers.

Those attending the conference will have a rare opportunity to reflect on the unique role of the workplace in the fight against the pandemic, and to share experience of best practice.

Speakers will highlight the need for action on prevention, care and treatment. And they will explore effective means of protecting workers from discrimination and stigma through appropriate legislation.
